

What do the San Jose Unified School District, the City of San Jose, San Jose State University, the San Jose Mercury News, and Rockwell Collins, Inc. all have in common? They are all San Jose organizations that either already have or will soon layoff employees. In nearby Sunnyvale, NetApp, which was recently named the No. 1 place to work amongst Fortune 100 companies, also announced layoffs. At NetApp, it's a great place to work – if you can keep your job.

A trusted San Jose bankruptcy lawyer can be of great help during bankruptcy. Call (877) 427-2752 and consult with a bankruptcy attorney now.

Across Silicon Valley, the story is the same: companies that tried to hang on through the hardest moments of the recession in 2008 and 2009 just can't hang on any longer in 2010. In the self-proclaimed “capital” of Silicon Valley, San Jose residents are taking the fallout from the recession on the chin. If anything, Silicon Valley is being hit even harder than the Los Angeles area – the bankruptcy court for San Jose has seen more bankruptcy cases than the court that handles Los Angeles County. Though this might be good news for a

San Jose bankruptcy lawyer

, it's not good news for the average San Jose resident.

Who's Looking for a California Bankruptcy Attorney?

Across the state of California, the offices of any given bankruptcy lawyer in California are getting crowded, and San Jose is experiencing the same. In the January 29, 2010 “San Jose Business Journal”, California bankruptcy lawyer Michael Malter told the “Journal”, “We've been receiving between 10 and 15 requests a day from potential clients.” At Malter's firm, they've had to turn away clients to keep their caseload reasonable. He went on to say, “I'm seeing people every day who in a normal world would never ever meet with a [San Jose bankruptcy lawyer].”

The Californians filing for bankruptcy these days range from former white collar employees who have been laid off for months and can't keep up with mortgage payments anymore, to families whose insurance company has forced them to pay tens of thousands of dollars in medical bills. Unemployment during a recession is bad enough; when unemployment is combined with medical expenses, difficult divorce settlements, or other financial issues, many Silicon Valley residents find themselves dialing the number of a San Jose bankruptcy lawyer.

A San Jose bankruptcy lawyer can help

As any bankruptcy attorney in California can explain, the first step for debtors facing bankruptcy should always be finding a local

California

bankruptcy attorney

. Bankruptcy law is more complicated than it might seem at first glance, and trying to navigate a bankruptcy procedure without a bankruptcy lawyer is not a wise idea. Call a bankruptcy attorney in your area today; you might even be offered a free consultation over the phone or in person to discuss your bankruptcy options.

Bankruptcy law is more complicated than it might seem at first glance, and trying to navigate a bankruptcy procedure without a California bankruptcy lawyer is not a wise idea.